There are two ways of dealing with a difficult situation. Either we can anticipate the trouble and take preventive steps to avoid the possible dangers, or wait till the situation develops into some form of danger and then take action to come out of the trouble we are already in. Which is the better course of action? Obviously it is better to prevent the situation from developing into danger. If we live in unhygienic circumstances or consume unclean water or food we are sure to contract diseases. Of course, after having fallen ill, we can consult a doctor, take medicines and get cured. But it involves a lot of time, energy and money. By taking little precautions like avoiding the use of unclean water and food, we can prevent the disease and save ourselves from all the troublesome consequences of falling ill. This is true not only in matters of health, but in every walk of life. The wise thing to do is to anticipate events and take prompt and proper steps to prevent the situation from developing into trouble.

(b) Make notes on the following passage :

It is the temperate countries of northern Europe that the beneficial effects of cold are most clearly manifest. A cold climate seems to stimulate energy by acting as an obstacle. In the face of an insuperable obstacles our energies are numbed by despair; the total absence of obstacles, on the other hand, leaves no room for the exercise and training of energy; but a struggle against difficulties that we have a fair hope of overcoming, calls into active operation all our powers. In like manner, while intense cold numbs human energies, and a hot climate affords little motive for exertion, moderate cold seems to have a bracing effect on the human race. In a moderately cold climate man is engaged in an arduous, but no hopeless struggle with the inclemency of the weather. He has to build strong houses and procure thick clothes to keep himself warm. To supply fuel for his fires, he must hew down trees and dig coal out of the bowels of the earth. In the open air, unless he moves quickly he will suffer pain from the biting wind. Finally, in order to replenish the expenditure of bodily tissue caused by his necessary exertions, he has to procure for himself plenty of nourishing food.

Quite different is the lot of man in the tropics. In the neighbourhood of the equator there is little need of clothes or fire, and it is possible with perfect comfort and no danger to health, to pass the livelong day stretched out on the bare ground beneath the shades of a tree. A very little fruit or vegetable food is required to sustain life under such circumstances, and that little can be obtained without much exertion from the bounteous earth.

We may recognize much the same difference between ourselves at different seasons of the year, as there is between human nature in the tropics and in temperate climates. In hot weather we are generally languid and inclined to take life easily; but when the cold season comes, we find that we are more inclined to vigorous exertion of our minds and bodies.
